WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Mostly clear skies and dry conditions will continue through today as high pressure persists aloft. Coastal low clouds will return by Tuesday while mostly clear skies continue inland.

Medford Weather:

Temperatures will be above normal today through Friday. The warmest readings will be this afternoon under mostly clear skies as a high pressure ridge strengthens over the Pacific Northwest and a coastal thermal trough moves inland. There will be a series of disturbances in a southwest to west flow aloft that brush past the forecast area this week with only the southern fringe providing the region with coastal night and morning low clouds, as well as an increase in mid and mostly high level cloud cover.

Reno Weather:

Low pressure over southeast California will continue to bring showers to western Nevada and the Sierra south of Highway 50 today, with light snow possible above 9,000 feet in Mono County. High pressure will build over northeast California and western Nevada starting Tuesday, bringing drier conditions with afternoon highs warming to well above normal for mid to late week.

San Francisco Weather:

Weak onshore flow today then an upper level ridge will develop over California before strengthening late in the week. This will result in dry and warming conditions through the upcoming weekend. A general cooling trend is expected into early next week. Dry weather is expected for the upcoming week.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Mild weather with near to slightly below temperatures forecast through Tuesday. Warming conditions will begin on Wednesday.

Hanford Weather:

Showers and possible thunderstorms will linger over the mountains and desert through this evening as a storm system moves into southeast California. Dry weather and a significant day to day warming trend will begin Tuesday and continue through next weekend as high pressure builds over central California.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Lingering showers will persist over eastern Los Angeles County through this afternoon. High pressure aloft will build into the region this week, supporting a warming trend with well above normal temperatures and gusty offshore winds possible by the weekend.

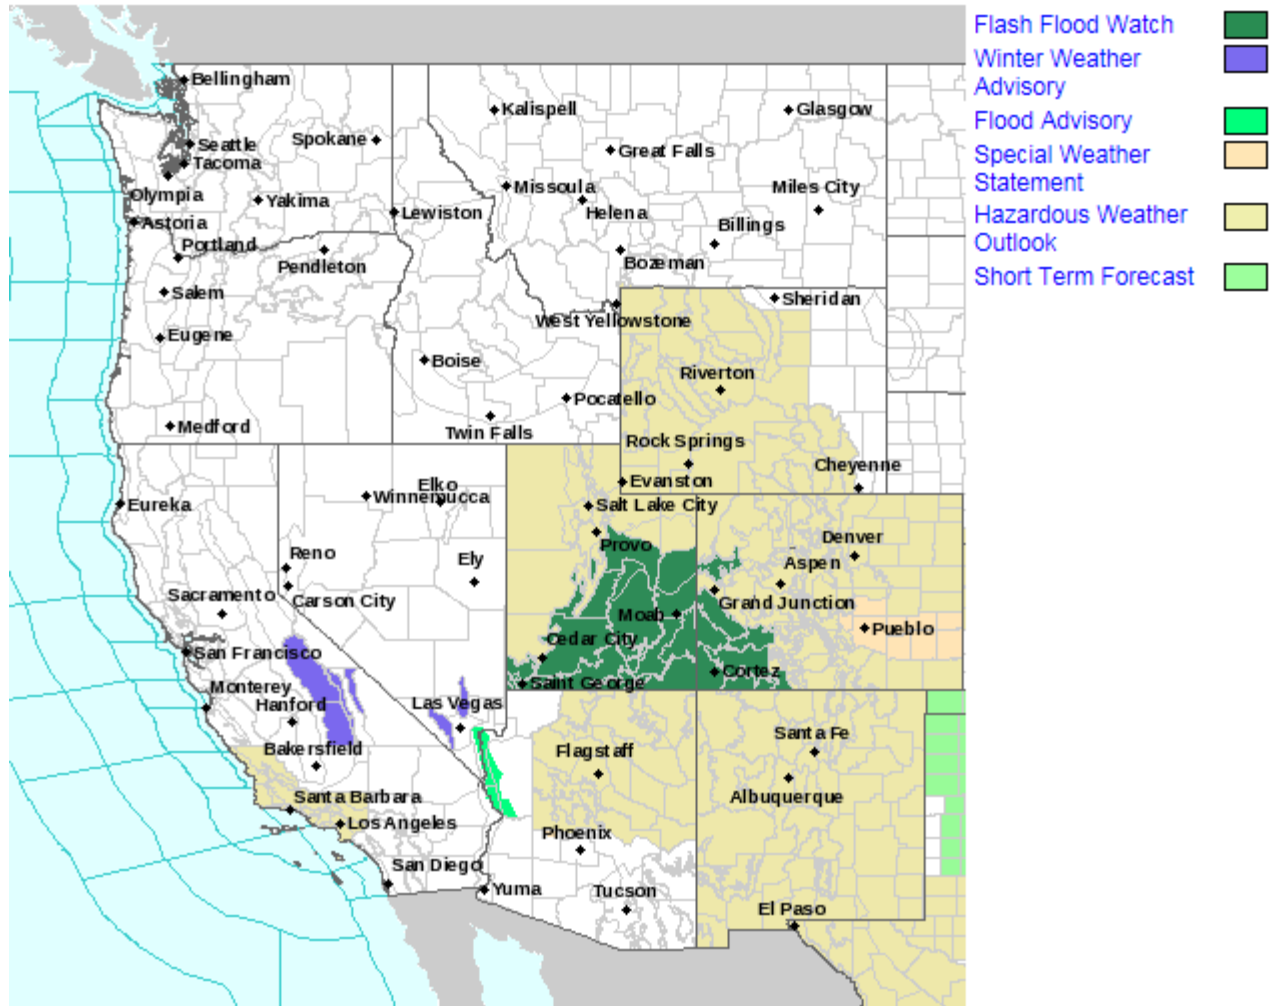

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

A low pressure system over Southern California will move slowly eastward through Tuesday. Scattered showers today will decrease this evening. There is a slight chance of showers near the mountains Tuesday afternoon. For Wednesday into next weekend, high pressure aloft will bring dry and warmer weather with well above average high temperatures for Friday into next weekend.

Southeast California Weather:

A strong and cold low pressure system will remain nearly stationary across the region today before gradually sliding southeastward by Wednesday. This will result in good chances of showers and thunderstorms today and Tuesday. Decreasing moisture and clearing skies are expected starting Wednesday, with near to slightly above normal temperatures toward the end of the week.
